Maths jokes

Why did the batter love the mean?

One big innings lifts the whole average.

Why is a good cup of chai like maths?

It's all about getting the ratio right.

Why does a rangoli always look so neat?

It has lines of symmetry to spare.

Why did the laddoo refuse to be cut into thirds?

It didn't want to be a recurring decimal.

Why do trains love algebra questions?

They're always being asked when they'll meet.

Why is a canteen queue like an AP?

Every minute, the same number join.

Why was the kite flyer so good at trigonometry?

They always knew the angle of elevation.

Why is 1729 such an interesting taxi number?

It's the sum of two cubes in two different ways.

Why is the derivative so good at handling change?

It's literally its job.

Where do logarithms go on holiday?

A log cabin, with a natural base.

Why did the constant leave the derivative's party?

It felt like it disappeared.

Why is the normal distribution so popular?

Most people find it pretty average.

Why did i bring a real friend to the party?

To make it complex.

Why did the function invite its integral to every family event?

It wanted to see the area it had covered.

Why did 6 keep away from 7?

Because 7 8 9.

Why is e^x so calm when it's differentiated?

It's already been through it all and come out the same.

Why should you never start a conversation with π?

It goes on for ever.

Why are obtuse angles always so grumpy?

Because they are never right.

How do you warm up in a cold classroom?

Stand in the corner. It's 90 degrees.

What did the triangle say to the circle?

"You're pointless."